One day, Strawberry Shortcake and her friends were taking a walk when they heard a berry strange sound.

"What was that?" exclaimed Plum Pudding and Orange Blossom.

"Maybe it's a m-monster!" cried Lemon Meringue as she jumped behind Raspberry Torte and Cherry Jam.

"There it is again!" said Blueberry Muffin.
"Hm . . . ," said Strawberry. "Let's investigate!"
Strawberry pushed through some bushes. On the other side, she saw . . .

"Puppies!" exclaimed Strawberry in surprise.
"Aw, how cute!" her friends cried, after they caught up.

The girls watched as a pack of playful puppies bounded about, barking and chasing each other. A boy and a broken-down truck were nearby. "Stop! Stop now!" the boy was shouting at the dogs. "Settle down!"

"Hello!" called Strawberry.

"Hi!" answered the boy. "I'm Huckleberry Pie. I was on my way to Berry Big City, but my pet-mobile got stuck!"

Strawberry and her friends introduced themselves and helped Huckleberry round up the dogs.

"What adorable puppies!" exclaimed Cherry.
"They're so soft and cuddly," said Raspberry.
"Aw, he likes me!" said Blueberry as Scouty, the collie, licked her cheek.

"You certainly have a lot of pets!" Lemon told Huckleberry.

"Only TomTom is mine," he replied, pointing to the cute brown hound. "I'm taking the rest to be adopted."

"That's berry sweet of you!" said Plum.

"I have an idea!" said Strawberry. "Why don't we watch the dogs while you get your truck fixed?"

"You'd do that for me?" asked Huckleberry shyly.

"Of course!" said Strawberry. "Anything to help a new friend!"

Each girl selected a puppy to look after.

"Don't worry, we'll take great care of them!" the girls called to Huckleberry as they went on their way.

Later that afternoon, Huckleberry stopped at the Berry Café for a snack. "Wow! Your pets really like TomTom!" said Huckleberry when he saw Pupcake and Custard snuggling with his hound.

Just then, Blueberry and Orange came by with Scouty and Marmalade, the dachshund.

"Thank you for walking them," said Huckleberry.

"No problem," the girls replied. "It's so much fun!"

In fact, all the girls were having a blast playing with their new puppy friends.

Strawberry and Huckleberry visited Lemon at her salon, where she was busy giving the spaniel a special makeover.

"Henna is going to look berry glamorous!" said Lemon.

At the dance studio, Plum was teaching the terrier some new moves.

"Watch this!" said Plum. "PitterPatch is a natural!"

"He's berry talented," agreed Huckleberry.

Next, Strawberry and Huckleberry stopped by Cherry's recording studio to listen as Cherry and the dalmatian belted out some tunes.

"Doesn't CinnaPup have a great voice?" asked Cherry when they finished rehearsing the chorus.

And at the boutique, Raspberry was designing a fabulous new outfit for the Chihuahua.

"Chiffon has inspired me to create a new line of doggie fashions!" said Raspberry.

"She looks berry stylish," said Strawberry.

Soon enough, Huckleberry's pet-mobile was as good as new, and it was time for him to leave for Berry Big City. Everyone in town gathered to say goodbye.

"Thank you for all your help," Huckleberry told Strawberry. "There's just one problem . . ."

"Oh no!" said Strawberry. "What is it?"

"Where are all the dogs?" asked Huckleberry.

"Can we talk to you about that?" called Lemon as she arrived. "I'd like to adopt Henna."

"CinnaPup and I harmonize so well," said Cherry. "I'd love to keep her."

"Marmalade and I don't want to say goodbye," Orange explained. "We just can't get enough puppy love!"

"Of cou rry replied. "The dogs can stay."

The girls chee d the puppies howled happily.

"It sounds like this is the beginning of some fruitastic and furry new friendships!" said Strawberry.
